A first-rate speaker. After about 10 minutes, the audience realized this was no ordinary boring mandatory government meeting. Mr. Semko was extremely informative (even deadly serious, which of course was the purpose of the brief), effusive, self-deprecating, and hilarious. Afterward I realized I had only looked at my watch once and I was amazed at how quickly the time had passed. I wish I had looked around to see if anyone was nodding off (which I sincerely doubt) but I was too personally engrossed in the brief to avert my eyes from the speaker. Bravo Zulu to Ray Semko. "Ray was a counterintelligence agent for more than 30 years, so he brings to his speech his 'in the trenches' experience and knowledge of what we should protect and how to protect it. He explains who the players are, their targets, their methods and most importantly, how employees can protect the information they handle. With this I am more aware of the threats and can do a better job in protecting intelligence information. He is a very patriotic person and
